

C

The Crochet Cap Blueprint™

BONUS 3 OF 4

Photography Class

Phone-only product photography that makes a handmade cap look worth its price — lighting, angles, and the shot list buyers actually respond to.

Bonus guide

2026 edition

BONUS 3

Photos that sell the craftsmanship

No studio, no professional camera — just a window, a plain background and a shot list.

Buyers can't touch the yarn or feel the stitch detail, so your photos are doing all the selling. The good news: natural light and a clean background outperform expensive equipment almost every time.

Lighting

- Shoot near a window with soft, indirect daylight — never direct sun, which creates harsh shadows on the stitch texture.
- Overcast days are ideal: the light is even and flatters yarn colors accurately.
- Avoid indoor bulbs alone — they shift colors yellow and make cotton look duller than it is.

The shot list

SHOT	WHY IT MATTERS
1. Worn, front-facing	Buyers need to see it on a real head to picture themselves wearing it
2. Worn, 3/4 back angle	Shows the crown motif and drop-tie detail that photos 1 misses
3. Flat lay on a plain background	Shows true color and overall shape without a face distracting
4. Close-up of stitch detail	This is the photo that justifies a handmade price — buyers zoom in on texture
5. Scale reference	A hand or a common object next to the cap helps buyers judge size online

💡 THE ONE-PLANT TRICK

A single plant, a woven basket, or a wooden surface in the background (as in the reference lifestyle photos) instantly reads as "boutique" instead of "craft table." You don't need a full set — one consistent prop used across your whole shop builds a recognizable style.

Editing — keep it minimal

Adjust exposure and white balance only. Avoid heavy filters that shift the yarn's actual color — a buyer who receives a cap that looks different from the photo is the #1 driver of returns and bad reviews in handmade sales.

⚠️ COMMON MISTAKE

Photographing only flat lays. Listings with at least one worn photo consistently convert better — buyers need to see fit and drape, not just shape.

Shoot your first listing set today.

Next: Bonus 4 · Online Selling Class, to turn these photos into your first booked order.

The Crochet Cap Blueprint™

Bonus 3 of 4 · Photography Class