BEFORE YOU START

The Ceiling You Can't See

“Retail one-at-a-time caps you around $900 a month. It doesn't matter how good your caps are — the math has a ceiling built in. The only way past it is one bulk order.”

Best case, best Saturday market: 15 caps sold at roughly $18 each is $270. Four Saturdays straight is about $1,100 gross. After materials, table fees, and gas, you're clearing around $900 in a great month — and that's the ceiling, no matter how skilled you get.

One bulk order from a single boutique, gift shop, or local business owner changes the math entirely, because it's one conversation instead of dozens, and it books weeks or months of income at once. This book is built to get you that one conversation.

HOW TO USE THIS BOOK

Read the Walk-In Script once, print the Line Sheet, run your actual numbers through the Bulk Pricing Calculator, then pick 3 shops from the Outreach List to approach this week. You don't need all 20 at once — you need one yes.

The Walk-In Script

Three opening lines, four objection responses, and one closing line — for walking into any boutique, gift shop, or salon with samples.

3 OPENING LINES

SAY THIS WHEN YOU WALK IN WITH YOUR SAMPLES

- 1 “Hi! I make handmade crochet caps locally, and I think your customers might really love them — do you have a minute to take a look?”
- 2 “Hi, I’m [name], I hand-make these crochet caps just a few miles from here — I’d love to leave a couple samples if you’re open to carrying handmade pieces.”
- 3 “Hi! I noticed you carry [similar handmade category — candles/jewelry/etc] — I make crochet caps by hand and thought they might fit really well alongside what you’ve already got.”

4 OBJECTION RESPONSES

“They’re too expensive for us to carry”

Totally understand — the wholesale price is different from retail, and I can work with you on minimum order size to keep your upfront cost manageable. Want me to run a couple of numbers for you?

“We already have a supplier for something similar”

No problem at all — would it be alright if I left a sample anyway? A lot of shops end up carrying mine alongside their existing line since the handmade angle tends to appeal to a slightly different customer.

“I’m not sure these will sell here”

That's fair — would you be open to a small trial order, maybe 6-8 pieces, just to see how they move? If they don't sell, you're not stuck with a big order.

“I need to think about it”

Of course! Here's my line sheet with pricing and minimums — feel free to reach out whenever, and I'm happy to leave a sample or two here in the meantime if that helps you decide.

THE CLOSING LINE

SAY THIS TO MOVE TOWARD AN ACTUAL ORDER

“Would a small starter order of [minimum order quantity] pieces make sense to test how they do in your store?”

ALWAYS LEAVE A SAMPLE

Even on a 'no' or a 'let me think about it,' leaving 1-2 sample caps behind (with your line sheet attached) turns a hard no into a maybe — shop owners often come back once they've had the piece sitting on their counter for a week.

MODULE 2 OF 4

Line Sheet Template

An editable one-page reference with your prices, minimum order, and turnaround time already laid out — ready to hand over on the spot.

Print this filled in with your own numbers and bring several copies to every shop visit — it's what a shop owner keeps after you've left, so it needs to stand on its own.

TURNAROUND TIME

Standard orders ship within [X] business days of order confirmation. Rush turnaround available on request — mention this only if you can realistically deliver faster, since a missed deadline with a shop is harder to recover from than with an individual buyer.

The Bulk Pricing Calculator

The keystone $\times 2.2$ formula, worked with real numbers, so you never accidentally quote a wholesale price that loses you money.

Wholesale pricing works backwards from your cost, not from what you'd charge one retail buyer. The standard formula shops expect is keystone pricing: your wholesale price is roughly double your true cost, and the shop's retail price is roughly double their wholesale cost — a combined multiplier of about 2.2 $\times$ from your cost to the final shelf price.

WORKED EXAMPLE

True cost per cap
Materials cost per cap (yarn, packaging)	$4.50
Labor — 2 hours at $8/hr (bulk-order pace, not retail pace)	$16.00
True cost per cap	$20.50
Your wholesale price
True cost	$20.50
$\times 2$ (your wholesale markup — this is your keystone price)	\$41.00
Your wholesale price to the shop	$41.00
Suggested MSRP
Your wholesale price	$41.00
$\times 2$ (shop's own retail markup)	\$82.00
Suggested MSRP on the shop's shelf	~$80-85

Note that a bulk order changes your labor cost per piece — at production pace on a 40-unit order, you're typically faster per cap than a single custom order, which is why the labor line above uses a lower per-hour allocation than a one-off retail piece would.

NEVER UNDERCUT YOUR OWN WHOLESALE PRICE

If a shop asks you to match your retail price for a bulk order, decline — that erases your margin entirely once materials and labor are counted, and it sets a precedent that's hard to undo on future orders.

PASTE AND PERSONALIZE BEFORE SENDING

Subject: Handmade crochet caps for [Shop Name]?

Hi [owner name],

My name is [your name], and I hand-make crochet caps locally — I think they could be a great fit alongside what you already carry at [Shop Name]. I've attached a quick line sheet with pricing and minimum order details.

Would you be open to a small trial order to see how they do with your customers? I'm also happy to drop off a couple of samples in person if that's easier.

Thanks so much for considering it — either way, I really admire what you've built at [Shop Name].

FOLLOW-UP RULE

If you don't hear back within a week, one polite follow-up is normal and expected in wholesale outreach — shop owners are busy, and a follow-up is rarely seen as pushy the way it might feel in a one-on-one sale.

One conversation changes the math.

Pick 3 shops from your list. Bring samples.
Use the script. That's the whole ceiling, broken.
